POETRY.

From the Baltimore Young Men's Paper. THE SOLDIER'S PARTING. Adieu! adieu! my love, adicu!
The parting hour is here;
One word, one look, one kiss, one sigh—
Nay!—not a parting tear.

Oh! keep that chrystal drop, my sweet! For other hours than this; Perchance to flow when next we meet

In extacy of bliss! Perchance, on some soft mounlit eve, Within our favorite bower,
'Twill flow, in musing, and relieve
The loneliness of the four.

Her wreath upon my brow, May wake the pearly drop that sleeps Beneath your eyelid now. Perchance—(oh! be that diamond dim, Forever dim till 'then,)
'T may fall thy last dear gift to him, Who lies amongst the slain!—

The bugle calls-oh! keep that tear The bugle calls—off: keep that tear
And treasure it for me;
'Twill mind thee, love—nay, see 'tis here—
'T has fallen upon my corslet, near
The heart that beats for thee.

There let it grow in unison
With each dear thought of thee;
Till tear and heart unite in one,
And Love shall gain, when war is done,
A double victory!
The bugle calls to arms, be true—
Flowers to the state of the

Dialect of the Turf .- If there be any country that possesses a peculiarity of phraseology relating to matters of the Turf, it should be ours where these sports are and have been in such great repute-especially in the South, to whose penchant for the invigorating and athletic exercises of equitation, we are indebted for their noble breeds of horses. In the account of the races on the Jefferson Turf, published in the Charleston (Virginia) Free Press, we have been amused with some of those slang terms, which are used on such occasions.

So confident are we that such will be the result, that we should feel perfectly secure if the election were to be decided by that State alone-but, thanks to the intelligence and discernment

We fully agree with our correspondent, prehended from the substitution of mob law for the statute law. We trust, and believe, that there is not a single reputable citizen in Boston, who would not grieve to see re-enacted hero, the scenes of outrage and murder which have disgraced the south and west, within the last six months It needs no prophetic power to discern in the commotion of Wednesday, the seeds of a wicked men, is a most dangerous enemy to private and political rights; driven on by the phrenzy of the moment, individuals, at such times, will aid in performing acts, the bare contemplation of which will make them shudder in their calmer, cooler moments. They do not then stop to think of the misery and suffering which then stop to think of the misery and suffering which overt acts of violence necessarily inflict upon innocent persons-upon inoffensive females and helpless children-but borne along by excitement, they sacrifice every thing to a spirit of heedless passion.

But aside from all this, in a community like ours, where the people make their laws, and choose their rulers, it is their own fault, if the former are not competent to the crisis, or the latter do not enforce their provisions. A Portuguese frigate, upon the receipt of this intelligence, was despatched to Moggadore to bring home the money and other valuables plundered at Port Praya, and also the captive insurgents. Capt.
